

Invitation to The Grand Project

The time has come to take action and address the current state of our world. We stand on the precipice of an abyss, and failure now would result in more than just a fleeting and mediocre existence. It would mean forfeiting the chance to fulfill our greatest dreams.

Nevertheless, the moment to act has arrived multiple times before. The idealists, dreamers, and visionaries of the past have encountered failure after failure, each one contributing to the next generation's perseverance. Their efforts have sustained the ideas of a better life and a better world.

As the human race, we do make progress, although it's not always consistent. Existential crises arise intermittently, demanding our attention. Above all else, we must prevent mutual destruction.

Humanity shouldn't strive for a lofty common value system but rather aim for mutual respect among nations.

With these opinions in mind, let us turn our focus to the vast potential inherent in humanity. Our entire history, compared to the vastness of the universe, is but a fleeting moment. However, if we don't act wisely, it may be even shorter. Why should we care? We will all pass away eventually, and others will come after us. Isn't it their problem then? Not according to our beliefs.

Instead of succumbing to destruction and decay, let us explore the depths of our accumulated knowledge. Therefore, we are preparing to embark on an unprecedented project.

The objective of this project is almost unattainable. But note the crucial word: almost. It is a grand quest that addresses a problem of great significance to every conscious being—death.

Let us establish the foundation for a civilization that will one day possess the power to resurrect all the deceased, including yourself. This project will be truly remarkable, and even in the face of failure, it will be a magnificent endeavor. We must not entertain the notion of giving up.

That is our intention—to initiate a project that brings the deceased back to life, through our own efforts.

Is it possible? We can only state that it is nearly impossible, but not entirely so.

The Manifesto provides arguments both for and against this project. It also presents the concepts, assumptions about the world, and ideas on how we may someday transform it into reality.

This is not a belief system; it is a vision and a plan. Let us condense it into a timeless message with enormous potential.

Our greatest pursuit is the resurrection of every sentient being who has ever lived. Through our unwavering dedication, we aim to grant them an extraordinary existence without limitations, except for those that contradict the initial parts of this statement.

You are invited to be part of this groundbreaking project. Immerse yourself in our worldview and delve into the intricate concepts outlined in the manifesto, "Resurrection through Science."

Sincerely Magnus Nilsson
